

DIDN'T BORROW TO WOO YANKEE GIRL

Count von Moennich Explains He Contracted a Loan of $50,000 to Court Wealthy German Girl Who Refused Him.

PAID HIS OWN WAY HERE.

Declares that After He Wedded an American Heiress He Explained Whole Matter to Her and She Was Satisfied.

BERLIN, Oct. 21.—Count Francis Joseph Maria Larisch von Moennich is testifying against the syndicate of money-lenders which he accuses of attempted extortion. The Count, who is a namesake of the Emperor of Austria and a close relative of the late Empress Elisabeth, married Miss Marie Satterfield at Buffalo, N. Y., in June, 1901. The Count testified yesterday that immediately after his marriage a New York bank sent him a draft for $50,000, forwarded by the money-lending syndicate, which he refused to pay.

The syndicate, he said, was composed of four merchants and six mortgage agents—two of the syndicate were directors of a savings bank. This, the Count continued, was the beginning of the syndicate's persecution.

The accused persons assert that they financed Count Larisch von Moennich with $50,000 to go to Nuremberg to court one of the three daughters of Baron von Faber, the famous pencil manufacturer, each reputed to have a fortune of $20,000,000. The Count signed this note, which he was to pay should he marry a Miss Faber.

Suit Was Not Successful.

He went to Nuremberg well supplied with money, they assert, paid his respects to Miss Faber, but was not successful. She ran one of her papa's pencils through his name. The money-lenders of the syndicate maintain that they do not demand payment on this particular $50,000 note, but on another which Count Larisch von Moennich signed, and to which no condition was attached.

On the other hand the Count expressly swore that he had not borrowed money to pursue his suit of Miss Satterfield, and that the draft for $50,000 on which he is being sued is based on one of the notes he signed in 1899, payable on condition that he married a Miss Faber. These notes aggregate $250,000.

The presiding judge in opening the case said he would try the names of the money-lenders would not be used carelessly, inasmuch as they are wholly innocent of any relations with the persons involved.

It is said here that the Count had dealings with the money-lenders for some time. His father paid them $40,000 and Count von Larisch Moennich borrowed other sums.

Then Went to America.

Then, in exchange for a few hundred marks he gave the money-lenders promissory notes and went to Wiesbaden, to court one of the Faber girls. They discouraged his advances and, later, at his own expense, the Count went to America and eventually married Miss Satterfield.

On motion of counsel for the defense the case was postponed to summer with names not disclosed. The trial probably will not be resumed until the new year.

Count von Larisch informed the Associated Press that Countess von Larisch is in Vienna, that she knew all about the case, and that she had known about it before their marriage. The Count claimed as "absurd" some of the statements published in the United States, that the Countess intended to sue for a divorce.

After his unsuccessful wooing of one of the Misses Faber, Count Larisch von Moennich came to America, presumably on his own initiative, and married Miss Satterfield, who had not previously known him, when she was touring Europe with her mother. The Countess's father, John Satterfield, who died in Pennsylvania, coal and oil. The Countess inherited $20,000 in her own right, and at her mother's death she and her brother, John, will inherit the great estate. The Countess, a beautiful girl of twenty years, was married under a big apple tree, on the lawn of her home, which was her favorite playground in childhood.

BROKE HIS SKULL WITH BRASS RULE

Train Despatcher Fatally Injures Brakeman Who Is Said to Have Attacked Him During a Quarrel About Employment.

As the result of a bitter fight in the freight cars of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, at Willis avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-second street, early to-day William E. Fortin, a brakeman, is dying at the Lincoln Hospital and Theodore G. Thurse, a train despatcher, is locked up at the Alexander avenue station-house with five small stab wounds in his shoulders. Thurse will enter a plea of self-defense. Fortin is an extra man, and when reeled last night could not be found. The man was the top of the extra list and within a short time will have been given a regular run. Thurse says he had been looking all over the yards for him, and even sent to his home at No. 635 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street.

When he could not be found the next man on the list was sent out on the car and Fortin was dropped to the bottom of the extra list. Several hours later he came into the despatcher's office. He had already been accused of Thurse and he angrily accused Thurse of discriminating against him.

The men talked loudly for a few minutes and then Thurse drew a small knife from his pocket and stabbed Fortin. The men clinched and struggled all over the car. Fortin, plunging his knife into Thurse's shoulder, Thurse finally freed himself and seized a brass ruler from his desk, struck Fortin across the forehead. He fell to the floor unconscious. Thurse was found by Dr. Hanson of Lincoln Hospital. It is thought that his skull is fractured and that he is the only one short time. He is still unconscious, and there is little hope that he will ever be conscious long enough to make a statement.

Miss Susan Ryan arrested Thurse and took him to the station-house. His wounds were dressed and he was locked

WORKS HARD FOR BLIND HUSBAND

Faithful Wife Slaved as Nurse in Order to Aid Aged Spouse Till Drink of Whiskey Caused Trouble.

A pathetic story was told to Miss Virginia R. Moore, the probationary officer of the Gates Avenue Police Court, Brooklyn, by aged and feeble Mrs. Frederick Giblin, who, once wealthy and respected, was arraigned before Magistrate Farlong charged with being a "common drunk." She is now at the Wayside Home.

The old woman is a native of the Channel Islands. She was married after coming to this country to Mr. Giblin, a promising young lawyer of Manhattan. Through unfortunate real estate investments the couple lost most of their property, but were still able to live in a cozy home in Brooklyn. About seven years ago Mr. Giblin was stricken with paralysis, and became totally blind. All they had went in attempts to restore his sight.

When their last penny was gone the plucky woman insisted on laboring for a living for herself and helpless husband. Keeping secret the history of her former

SHOT HIMSELF AT HIS WIFE'S DOOR

Max Santsman, Brooding Over Separation from His Family and Inability to Effect a Reconciliation, Fires Five Times.

ONE BULLET TAKES EFFECT.

Eighteen Families Thrown into a Panic by the Mad Deed—Wounded Man Has Few Chances for Recovery.

Grieving over separation from his wife and baby, Max Santsman, a traveling salesman, shot himself in front of the door of his former apartments, at No. 233 Division street, to-day. Although he fired five shots, only one took effect. He is now at the point of death in Gouverneur Hospital.

There are eighteen families in the house and the shots created a panic. Men and women rushed into the hallways. Mrs. Santsman rushed from her room and almost stumbled over the body of her husband where it lay in front of her door.

When the gas was lighted it was found that he clutched a revolver in his right hand. All five chambers had been emptied.

The shots had attracted two policemen, and they sent in a call for an ambulance. Dr. Miliken removed the injured man to Gouverneur Hospital, where it was found that one bullet had entered the left temple and penetrated the brain. He did not regain consciousness, and the doctors said it was only a matter of hours until he died.

Until three weeks ago Santsman lived with his wife and child in Division street. There was a quarrel, and he went to live at No. 217 Madison street, where he had a furnished room at the apartment of Mrs. Ash.

He neglected his business and was seldom at home. Several times he tried to effect a reconciliation with his wife, but in each case he would not receive him again. To his friends he threatened to end his life, but they did not take him seriously.

He went to his room early last night and remained there until almost midnight. Mrs. Ash heard him walking nervously and from until he left shortly before midnight. None of his friends saw him until after he shot himself.

Mrs. Santsman refused to discuss the case to-day and would not tell what the trouble between them had been. She said her husband had not been in her room last night and had evidently shot himself as soon as he entered the hallway.

MARABOU FEATHERS.

It is a startling fact that the lovely and soft marabou feathers are obtained from the "adulterant" bird and a kindred species, both of which are scavengers, feeding on offal of every description.
